

Official Site for “Live Pterosaurs in America”

The new official web site for the second edition of Live Pterosaurs in America is up. I think the banner is more attractive than the one on the old site. The home page is heavily promotional for selling the book; but another page, “Pterosaurs in the United States,” has some details about eyewitness sightings, quoting from the book:

“The flight destination may have been this meadow near Campus Drive.” The eyewitness described the dark giant flying creature as “30 feet long, with 15-16 feet of that being a tail.” It flew low over a road, near California State University at Irvine (in Southern California). The giant size, long tail, and obvious lack of any feathers made it very like the ropen of Papua New Guinea.
